

The Office of Inspector General for the Department of Transportation, responsible for reviewing the actions of the FAA, has recently issued two reports related to the FAA's progress on implementing new safety standards in the wake of the Continental flight 3407 crash. The full text of each report can be found by accessing the links below:

FAA and Industry Are Advancing the Airline Safety Act, but Challenges Remain To Achieve Its Full Measure

Growth of Domestic Airline Code Sharing Warrants Increased Attention